Dear John Smith,

Thank you for considering me for the Business Analyst Internship Position of the McKinsey & Company New York City Office.

I am currently a sophomore in the University of South Carolina's Darla Moore School of Business with a 3.95 GPA majoring in Finance with a Sustainability in Business Concentration. I am confident that my diverse coursework, experience in organizations like Gamecock Consulting Club, and leadership skills from positions in my social fraternity, will translate well to your company. I am currently gaining real world experience through case-competitions and creating and presenting pitch-decks for stocks in clubs like Carolina Fund. In conjunction with my abundance of real-world experience, my concentration in sustainability in business requires that I always think outside the box when applying any solution in a corporate environment. It is this type of creative thinking that I thrive in, and it is why I want to be in Business Consulting.

My aspiration to enter consulting developed from multiple experiences in my freshman year. Firstly, I began to take a heightened interest in my father's career in turnaround consulting. At the same time, my interest in courses like accounting were starting to peak. I loved being able to apply the textbook knowledge I was gaining from school to real world situations from my father's experiences - as well as see how he identified and solved problems. This brought me a level of intrinsic satisfaction that motivated me to apply to Gamecock Consulting Club. In this organization, I have participated in multiple case-competitions, talked to alumni about their experiences, and sat down with partnered firms, each of which have deepened my knowledge and passion for consulting.

There are a few key aspects that make me so excited to be a part of the McKinsey & Company Family in New York. I am born and raised in Long Island, I love going to the city, and I have known that I want to work in New York City since before I can remember. Also, McKinsey is a company that cares for the environment; your commitment to a net-zero climate impact by 2030 serves as a reminder that I will be working for a company that I am proud to be a part of. Lastly, my talks with John Doe who is also a Gamecock Consulting Alumni, talked to me about how your culture and work environment helped him learn and grow professionally during his college internship, and in his current full-time position. I can't wait to learn from my peers and give back in the future.

It is for these reasons; I can't wait to start off my professional career at McKinsey & Company. I can interview at any time, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Leo Goldberg
