

The Prompt: “Please tell us how your commitment to diversity, in all its forms, makes you the ideal candidate for dbAchieve”

Dear Deutsche Bank,

My commitment to diversity has been and always will be intrinsic to all my endeavors. From an early age, my parents taught me the importance of empathy, and the inclusion of those different than me. They also instilled in me the courage to stand up for what is right, whether for myself or others. These moral principles must be integral to any group of people that wish to succeed as a team. No one is as smart as all of us. This is why I recognize the importance of embracing diversity in all its forms as the means to give respect to every individual and to the different perspectives and viewpoints they bring that so often lie outside those of my own. As a member of the Gamecock Consulting Club, I participated in a case competition aimed at helping a startup medical company market and expand digital health care to customers in rural areas. My team consisted of both American and international students, each of us with different majors, cultural backgrounds, and thought processes. I valued every one of my members inputs and helped contribute to an inclusive environment where all voices were heard and valued. I believe that our dynamic and inclusive team environment that resulted from our valuing diversity was a key factor in our team winning the case competition. This experience reinforced my commitment to diversity in all of its forms and strengthened my resolve to respect and value the differences among people. I believe the character my parents instilled in me along with my experiences will enable me to contribute to and build upon the dynamic, inclusive, and innovative culture of the dbAchieve program.

Sincerely,
Leo
