

Dr. Paul Wade: Profile Tune-Up

A numbers-first plan to convert more of the right clients

Prepared July 2026 | PsyD, LPC | Columbia, SC

The one thing to internalize first

This is not a traffic problem. Over all time the profile has been shown in search roughly 680,000 times and has already produced 3,973 contacts. That is far more inquiry than one clinician at 120 dollars a session can serve.

So the goal is not more views. It is a sharper profile that converts the right clients and lets the wrong-fit inquiries fall away. Every recommendation below serves that single goal.

01 The funnel his dashboard already hands us

Three numbers pulled straight from Profile Performance, and the two rates that connect them. These rates are the real dials. A small movement here matters far more than chasing raw impressions.

680,300

Times shown in search results

▼ about 6 in 100 click through (5.97%)

40,600

Profile views

▼ about 10 in 100 reach out (9.79%)

3,973

Contacts: calls, emails and web clicks

Where those 3,973 contacts came from

1,456

Calls · 37%

891

Emails · 22%

1,626

Web clicks · 41%

Read the funnel this way

Raising either rate lifts contacts without a single extra impression. Also note the mix: web clicks are the largest bucket and they route to his Headway page, so that page is quietly doing a lot of the closing. It deserves the same polish as the PT profile.

02 Where the leverage actually is

Ranked by impact against effort. The top two are the whole game.

| Change                          | Leverage    | Effort  | Why it matters                                                                              |
|---------------------------------|-------------|---------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Narrow specialties to one lane  | High        | Free    | Sixty specialties reads as none. This is the biggest conversion lever and it costs nothing. |
| Add a 15-second video intro     | High        | Low     | The one item PT flags as incomplete. Lifts both the click and the contact step.             |
| Fix the email verification flag | High        | 5 min   | Email drives 891 contacts. A delivery warning means some may be silently failing.           |
| Grow endorsements past one      | Medium      | Low     | Thin social proof. A few colleague endorsements add quick credibility.                      |
| Fill gallery, tighten photos    | Low         | Low     | Completeness and a sense of place. Small polish, easy to do.                                |
| Switch metrics off All Time     | Unlocks all | 1 click | Without a fixed window, no edit is measurable. Do this before anything else.                |

Lever 1: Pick a lane (highest impact, and free)

The profile lists around sixty specialties, from dementia to autism to eating disorders to sports performance. Selecting everything reads as specializing in nothing, and it hurts the profile-to-contact rate, because someone with trauma wants a therapist who visibly focuses on trauma, not a generalist. The fix costs nothing: choose one clear lane and make the whole profile reinforce it. Options are on the next page.

Lever 2: Add the 15-second video

Psychology Today flags this as the one incomplete item, and video plays currently sit at zero. A short intro helps at both steps of the funnel: the video badge can lift search-card click-through, and a warm human face builds the trust that turns a view into a call. It is cheap and fast. Point it at the lane chosen in Lever 1 so the message stays consistent.

One honest caveat on order

A polished video aimed at an everything-profile still converts worse than a clear niche. Positioning first, then video. Not the other way around.

03 Specialty brainstorm: help him pick a lane

He does not have to invent a niche. He already wrote one, twice, in his own profile. The job is to choose which thread to pull and trim the specialty list to match. Not listing a specialty does not mean he cannot treat it. It means the profile finally has a point of view.

His Personal Statement already says

It speaks directly to high-achieving professionals with anxiety, people rebuilding after divorce, trauma recovery, couples with attachment wounds, and recovering from a narcissistic partner.

His Credentials note already says

It points to high-conflict family reunification, reshaping family relationships, and safety concerns including domestic violence and coercive control.

So there are two natural lanes. He can pick one, or blend them (see below).

LANE A

High-functioning adults and relationship recovery

WHO IT IS FOR

Professionals with anxiety, divorce recovery, trauma, attachment wounds, and narcissistic-relationship recovery.

KEEP ABOUT TEN

Anxiety, Depression, Trauma and PTSD, Divorce, Relationship Issues, Infidelity, Life Transitions, Self Esteem, Anger Management, Coping Skills.

WHY IT FITS

Matches the personal statement almost word for word, and it is a higher-fee, lower-acuity, self-referring audience.

LANE B

High-conflict family and coercive control

WHO IT IS FOR

High-conflict divorce and custody, family reunification, domestic violence and coercive control, parenting through conflict.

KEEP ABOUT TEN

Divorce, Family Conflict, Domestic Abuse, Domestic Violence, Parenting, Anger Management, Trauma and PTSD, Relationship Issues, Coping Skills, Life Transitions.

WHY IT FITS

Matches his actual certifications in domestic-abuse mediation and reunification. A genuinely differentiated, referral-heavy niche with fewer clinicians competing.

The elegant option: the two lanes share a spine

Narcissistic-partner recovery in the statement and coercive control in the credentials are the same underlying theme. One positioning unifies both, something like: adults navigating high-conflict and coercive relationships, and rebuilding afterward. That uses his rare mediation and reunification credentials as the proof, which almost no competing profile can match. If he wants a single lane, this is the one I would test first.

How many to keep, and what to cut

Aim for roughly eight to twelve specialties, all pointing the same direction. PT surfaces a short Top Specialties set most prominently, so the first handful should be the sharpest.

Cut anything that does not support the chosen lane, especially the outliers that scream I take everyone: dementia, autism, eating disorders, gambling, sports performance, testing and evaluation, psychosis, bipolar disorder, obesity, and internet or video-game addiction. He can still treat these. They just should not define the storefront.

04 Quick wins to catch this week

| Priority | Do this                            | Why                                                                                                                                       | Effort |
|----------|------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|
| URGENT   | Clear the “verify your email” flag | Email drives 891 contacts and the warning means some leads may never be delivered.                                                        | 5 min  |
| HIGH     | Ask colleagues for endorsements    | He sits at a single endorsement. A handful lifts trust with almost no effort.                                                             | Low    |
| POLISH   | Fill the empty gallery slot        | Keep the office photo, it sells a calm space. Add one more relevant image.                                                                | Low    |
| POLISH   | Lean into the PsyD                 | He is a doctoral clinician among mostly master's-level LPCs and LCSWs. Dr. is a real differentiator, so make it visible in the statement. | Low    |
| HIS CALL | Decide on the personal photo       | The photo with his wife adds warmth but blurs a boundary. Personal judgment; the office shot is safe either way.                          | Decide |

The three rates to watch

| Metric             | How to calculate it           | Baseline today    |
|--------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------|
| Card click-through | Profile Views ÷ Results Views | about 6.0%        |
| Contact conversion | Contacts ÷ Profile Views      | about 9.8%        |
| Video play rate    | Video Plays ÷ Profile Views   | 0% (no video yet) |

One caution: I have not assumed an industry benchmark for what a good rate is, because that varies by market and would be a guess. The point is to move his own numbers from these baselines, not to hit someone else's average.

Monthly log template (fill one row per month)

| Month | Results views | Profile views | Contacts | Card CTR | Contact rate | What I changed |
|-------|---------------|---------------|----------|----------|--------------|----------------|
|       |               |               |          |          |              |                |
|       |               |               |          |          |              |                |
|       |               |               |          |          |              |                |

Start here this week

1. Clear the email verification flag so no lead is lost.
2. Pick Lane A, Lane B, or the unified spine, and trim specialties to about ten.
3. Record a 15-second video pointed at that lane.

Everything else on these pages is polish.
